Program Talk

thanks

to GABOR REJTO and ADOLPH BALLER for the beautiful musical evening they gave to all of us on June 5th. And thanks to the USC Music Department for the use of Hancock Auditorium and their fine cooperation. The concert was not only an artistic event of superb beauty, but it was a financial success as well. Our appreciation too, to all of you who attended and helped make KPFK $1,700 richer.

And, kudos to ALAN WATTS for his benefit lecture and to all of you who supported it. The proceeds were $550.

about drama and literature

In her talk on the novel Anais Nin says: "In realist novels the drama was outside of man: man in conflict with nature, with others, with his destiny. In the novel of the future the drama will be situated where it first originated: within man himself." Miss Nin feels that the novel must dispense with the external "upholstery" of realism and move inward, using symbolism to project human meaning onto external events. "The creation of a story," she says, "is a quest for meaning . . . The significance is the drama." Since Miss Nin's theory would seem to be practiced in part, at least, by most important modern novelists, much of the interest of her talk lies in the illuminating examples which she gives of her own practice.

The practice of another writer who has made drama of inner events, Walter Van Tilburg Clark, may be heard in Tom Lempertz's burry reading of Clark's story of an old prospector nearing death, "The Wind and the Snow of Winter." And in another theoretic vein, critic Leslie Fielder discusses his controversial theory of the relationship between love and death in the American novel.

Two of the dramatic offerings, Judith Anderson's shortened version of Robinson Jeffers' Medea and Jean-Paul Sartre's modern classic No Exit, need little introduction. Both are performances of greater power.

Fewer people will know of William Butler Yeats's The Countess Cathleen, since the plays of Yeats, who is considered by many to be the greatest modern English poet, are practically never performed. This play, first produced in 1892, was one of the earliest modern experiments in poetic drama. The story has the quality of an Irish folk tale, though apparently Yeats drew from no existing tale. In time of famine the Countess Cathleen gives up first her wealth and then her soul to the merchants of the devil, thus obtaining food for the starving populace. Her act saves them not only from starvation but from selling their own souls for food.

A final item that should be of particular interest is Dr. Abraham Kaplan's lecture on existentialism, which begins a series of four talks by Dr. Kaplan on modern philosophies.

please note

Broadcast hours now start at 11:30 AM.

To oblige CHILDREN and PARENTS during vacation time, Laura Olsher has decided on the following broadcast hours for the CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS: 11:30 AM-12:00 noon and 5:00 PM-5:30 PM.

STEVE ALLEN has kindly offered our subscribers typewritten transcripts of his "MEETING OF THE MINDS" which was heard on June 26th as part of the "Taste of Fresh Air." In case you missed it, it brings together a panel including Aristotle, Hegel, Freud, Dostoevski, Montaigne and Clarence Darrow for a discussion of "Punishment."

Price $1.00 postage included. KPFK, 5636 Melrose Ave., L.A. 38.

EXTRA FOLIOS are available to KPFK subscribers either on a regular or occasional basis if you can put them to good use in obtaining other subscribers. Each folio costs over 5c, so please, use them well. A call or postcard to Subscription Dept., KPFK, will bring you the number you want.

Because of KPFK's policy of running all programs, be it music, lecture or interview its full, uninterrupted length, listeners may at times find a program a few minutes later on the air than scheduled. In no case though, will a program be broadcast earlier than its scheduled time.

To answer several listeners' questions: the sign on and off THEME of KPFK is Geminiani's Concerto Grosso #5, Opus 3.
